Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for low back pain between two groups of subjects who had been exposed to different levels of physical activity. A total of 60 male subjects were recruited from a health club and divided into two groups based on their level of physical activity. The first group consisted of 30 subjects who reported a high level of physical activity, while the second group consisted of 30 subjects who reported a low level of physical activity. All subjects completed a questionnaire that assessed various risk factors for low back pain, including age, weight, height, occupation, and history of previous injuries. The results of the study showed that there were no significant differences in the prevalence of risk factors between the two groups.
